To Whom It May Concern:

My wife Sarah and I just wanted to write a quick note in support of our friend and sometime-employee, Kayla Staples.

We were lucky enough to have Kayla come into our lives a few years ago, first in her role as an educator, and then eventually as a nanny for our children. We met her at the Center for Early Education, where my wife, Sarah, works and our children attend school. She had an easy-going, confident, and empowering presence with the kids that the whole school noticed. Although she had a passion for educating, she believed that there was more to do in her life and that the school was a good place for her to hone some of those skills.

Though she moved on, we held on to her as a family, and she remains the only person that we feel we can trust completely with our kids and in our home. We won't go on about our children, but we will say that they couldn't be more different and couldn't be more discerning about who they let into their complicated lives. But they've both let in Kayla, and we've been able to see her lead, problem-solve and provide unlimited support firsthand. She's been able to help us through many situations—many tricky—and always does it with that same confident, easy-going spirit of fun.

It's our opinion that she'd be great at most anything, and we know she has a great path ahead of her. We'd love to make ourselves available to you if you have any questions about her.

Thanks for your time.
